Accommodation :

The 1988 Southerly 115 offers a well-thought-out and practical interior, designed with cruising comfort and versatility in mind. Built with the brand's hallmark raised saloon and centre cockpit configuration, the accommodation is both light-filled and secure, making it particularly well-suited to extended coastal or offshore passages.

Accessed via the centre cockpit, the main companionway leads down into a bright saloon, a defining feature of the Southerly range. Thanks to the elevated deck saloon design, large windows provide excellent natural light and panoramic views, creating an airy and welcoming living space. The saloon typically features a U-shaped seating area around a central table to port, which can convert into an additional double berth if required, while a settee berth is found opposite. There is ample stowage throughout, with lockers and shelving thoughtfully integrated.

Forward of the saloon lies the galley, arranged in a practical, seagoing layout. It is well-equipped for cruising, offering a gimballed Voyager 4500 gas cooker with oven and grill, stainless steel sink, and Isotherm refrigerated storage, along with generous work surfaces and storage for provisions. Opposite the galley is the navigation station, providing a dedicated chart table and space for instruments, making passage planning and navigation convenient and sheltered.

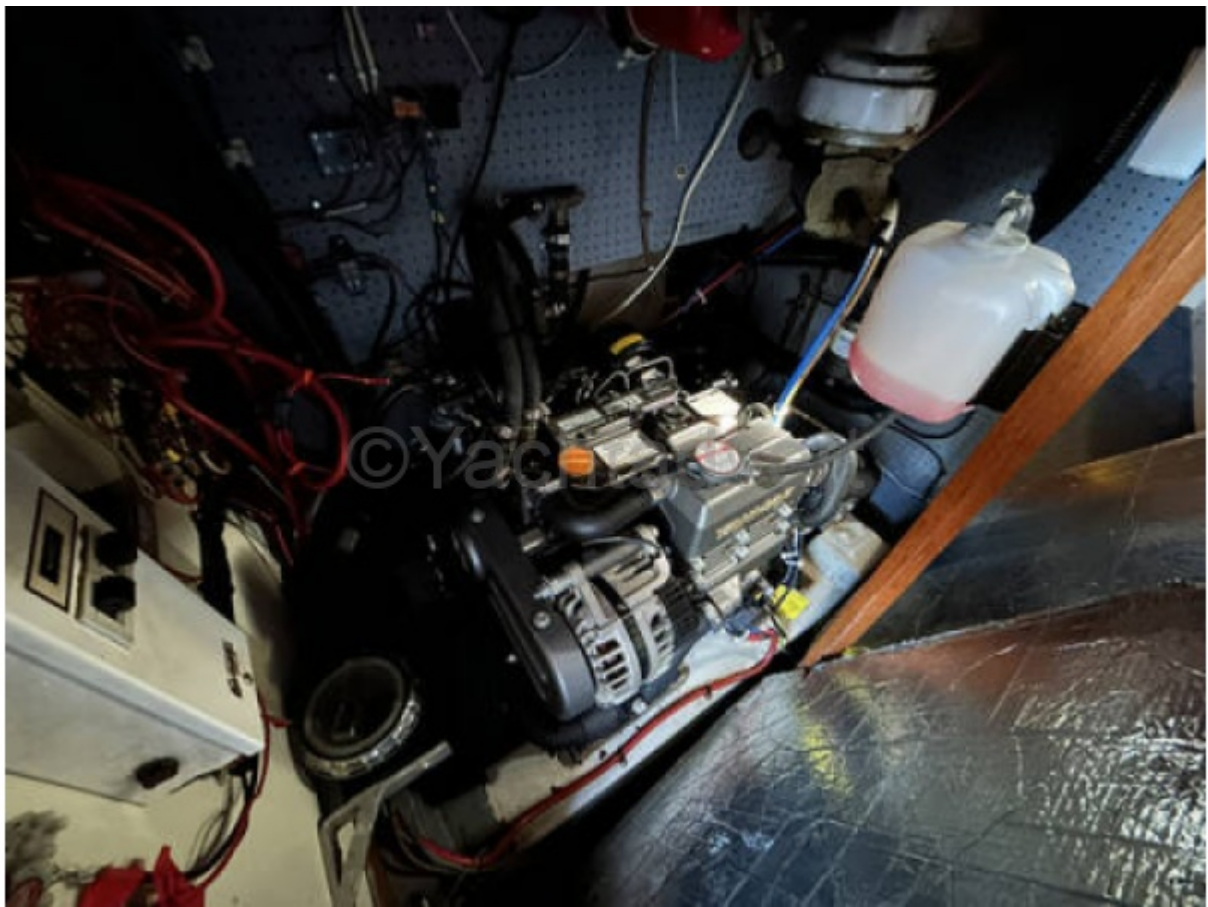

The forecabin provides comfortable accommodation with a V-berth arrangement, infill to create a double, and good stowage in lockers and beneath the berths. Natural light and ventilation are provided via an opening hatch and portlights. Adjacent is the heads compartment, fitted with a marine toilet, washbasin, and shower facilities.

Aft of the saloon, access leads to the owner's cabin located beneath the cockpit. This cabin features a generous double berth, hanging locker, and additional storage, offering a more private and quieter sleeping area, ideal for extended stays aboard. It also has its own Heads with a marine toilet and sink with hot and cold pressurised water.

Throughout the yacht, the interior joinery is finished in warm teak, giving a classic and robust feel, while the layout maximises both
