The boat was built by Whaly and carries build number NLWHA10105A323. With a length of 3.10 metres, a beam of 1.73 metres and a shallow draft of around 20 centimetres, she feels at home on lakes, canals and calm rivers. Thanks to the V-bottom, the Whaly cuts nicely through the water and offers a stable platform for relaxed trips, an afternoon of fishing or functional use as a workboat.

What makes this Whaly 310 console boat especially appealing to a wide range of watersports enthusiasts is its combination of light weight and easy handling. She has been used on inland waters and was last taken out of the water in 2026.

Whaly 310 now in the online auction. Anyone can bid up to and including 6 July 2026.
What makes this Whaly 310 so practical?
The Whaly is known for its double-walled plastic construction. This material was chosen with intensive use and low maintenance in mind. For anyone looking for a plastic console boat that can take a knock, this type is a logical candidate. The boat is suitable for recreational boating, but also for fishing, rental use or deployment as a workboat where simplicity and ease of use matter. Thanks to her compact size, she is also easy to moor and straightforward to operate, even if you don't have much boating experience yet.

How does she perform with the Mercury 10 hp outboard?
Mounted on the transom is a 2023 Mercury 10 hp outboard engine with serial number 1R231774. The engine is operational and has electric start, making departures from the harbour or dock a bit more comfortable. Combined with the dimensions of the Whaly 310, this provides a pleasant balance between relaxed cruising and quick trips. The stated cruising speed is around 10 km/h and the top speed around 15 km/h, ideal for leisurely outings on inland waters. She runs on petrol and has a 10-litre fuel tank, so you won't need to refuel after every short trip.

Is she suitable as a fishing boat or rental boat?
Yes, this Whaly 310 is particularly interesting for anyone looking for a fishing boat or rental boat. Her stable position in the water and uncluttered cockpit make it easy for one or two people to be comfortably on board. She also works well as a workboat, for example for inspection rounds, light transport tasks or support during watersports activities. Anyone searching for terms such as 'Whaly 310 for sale', 'console boat with outboard motor' or 'low-maintenance plastic boat' will find in this model a practical all-rounder with a clear focus on ease of use.

What equipment is on board?
An electric bilge pump is installed on board, a welcome feature for anyone who likes to head out with peace of mind. There is also one battery on board with a capacity of 45 Ah at 12V, suitable for the electric start and onboard systems. Steering is via a wheel at the external console, giving a true console-boat experience in a compact format.

This Whaly 310 with Mercury 10 hp outboard is an inviting choice for anyone looking for a compact motorboat for inland waters, with practical equipment and a layout that encourages you to head out and start boating right away. Through BoatAuction she will find a new owner who appreciates her qualities, whether for recreation, fishing, rental or functional use.
